ME AND MY PARENTS

I have a friend who recently lost her last surviving parent. This loss has ;cd her in some profound ways. She is preaching a new gospel. "Value parents while you still have them. It sounds not interesting but curiously, it _certain ring of truth that cannot be ignored.

The relationship between child and parent is dynamic. If I may speak for If, I recall a stage when my parents were my encyclopaedia on life. My r was a source of wisdom, he taught me about God, forgiveness and inner strength. My mother on the other hand was like a dictionary. Both of them 'It me the value of simplicity and humour.

I got to the teenage years and my parents were the most tiresome. My parents were people I did not want to be around. However, 1 still needed them to provide for me, those were difficult years. Young adult hood was my escape from them finally I was able to go out and live life and not worry them. I had the whole world stretched out before me.

However, it happened to me in the process I made the mistakes but my reference points were my friends, work and with time I realized I was missing something funder mental.

I longed for the child- like emotional connection with my parents. In returning to them I have found my redemption. By denying our parents, we are denying ourselves; by daring to live without them while they are still here, we are telling the creator that his plans were erroneous.
